 Moulton and Milligan, The Vocabulary of the Greek New Testament. 79).

¹ ος was the reading in the earlier Nestle editions, the first through 25th. Then in the 26th onward it was rejected and o was printed in its place. The change occurred also between the UBSGNT 2nd and the UBSGNT 3rd. Both words can be relative pronouns, however o would be neuter gender if it were used as a pronoun, whereas ος is masculine gender. s.v. Ephesians An Exegetical Commentary, 241, note 1. The Latin readings; Spiritus, qui, quod are also rather indeterminate. Most of the Bohairic MSS (5 of 6) read ete which indicate that their antecedents and subjects are identical, hence "Spirit" would be the "seal": as per noting the positions of the subject, verb and other grammatical elements within the Bohairic.

A tentative reconstruction

© 2020 G. S. Dykes

As can be observed there are about 26 letters per line. When compared to H¹, a determiner τῶν in line 6 is omitted per normal letterspacing and letter-count, it is in the H¹ text: it is not in the ϕ92. In line 7, the papyrus reads καθισας which is an aorist active masculine singular nominative participle, it is also the reading of most of the early manuscripts from Egypt. The ϕ92 reads εκαθισεν which is a verb, aorist active indicative third person, singular: "...He sat [Him] on His right...". The verb εκαθισεν, would help illuminate the subject "God" - "He"; whereas the participle reading does not emphasize the person. Semantically, little difference is noted in translation. [note: after this reconstruction, I noted that my effort matches that of Comfort and Barrett, i.e. The Text of the Earliest New Testament Manuscripts.].
